

Special Session Call for Submissions NARSC 2018

Special Session: Regional Disparities in Latin America

Organizers: Pedro Amaral, Universidade Federal de Minas Gerais (Brazil)

Miguel Flores, Tecnológico de Monterrey (Mexico)

The growing concern with local and regional imbalances in Latin American economic development requires the adoption of appropriate theoretical and methodological approaches to the spatial / territorial and political unique characteristics of the countries in the region. This need is made explicit in the numerous studies on Latin America containing clusters, agglomerations and productive arrangements, economies of location / agglomeration, interregional and international integration, among others.

This Special Session at NARSC 2018 offers all those who share an interest in regional and urban studies in Latin America the opportunity to explore and discuss key issues, especially:

- Spatial justice and inequalities
- Regional and urban disparities
- Regional and urban infrastructure
- Urban network and regional integration
- Industrial strategy and regional development

If you are interested in submitting to this special session, please submit your abstract online to the conference website (<http://www.narsc.org>) and then send us an email (pedroamaral@cedeplar.ufmg.br and miguelflores@itesm.mx) with the name of authors and their affiliations, submission's title, abstract and ID number.
